On the Agenda:

- Introduction to CIPL
- Sharing of best practices
- Practical Planning - ways your house of worship can reduce its carbon footprint, and support local and national climate reduction strategies

All faiths have core principles of taking care of and respecting the Earth. A growing number of congregations of all faiths locally and around the world are becoming involved in the work of protecting Creation by employing energy efficiency measures, advocating for climate legislation, and making education in their congregations a priority. CIPL is at the forefront of this work, and partners with houses of worship in taking practical steps to reduce carbon use, and in recognizing the inter-dependence of all living beings. Whether your house of worship has been involved in these efforts already, or if you are just beginning, please join us!

As people of faith, we are called to care for Creation, especially the most vulnerable in our world. This includes those people, locally and globally, who are and will be affected most by climate change and poor air quality, but who did the least to contribute to it.
